OPINION

The appellant, Zachary C. Robinson, seeks post-conviction relief from convictions occurring between 1977 and 1981. Although he has fully served the sentences associated with those convictions, he asserts that he was not apprised of the possible future ramifications of those convictions.¹ The trial judge dismissed the petition as untimely.² Upon review, we find no error of law mandating reversal. The trial court's dismissal is affirmed in accordance with Tenn. R. Ct. Crim. App., Rule 20.

JOE B. JONES, Presiding Judge

DAVID G. HAYES, Judge

¹Appellant pled guilty to seven felony charges in the late 70's and early 80's. He now argues that he would not have pled guilty had he been informed that the pleas could later be used against him in future criminal proceedings.

²Post-conviction relief petitions must be filed within three years from the final action of the highest appellate court. Tenn. Code Ann. § 40-30-102 (1990 & Supp.).
